DELORES HARMON

Delores Harmon was a basketball star at Hubbard High School from 1963-65, serving as team captain each season. She played the position of roving guard during a time when players were primarily only able to play one side of the court, offense or defense. Although Harmon was one of the players allowed to play both ends, she was best known for being her team's top defensive stopper. After finishing high school, Harmon received a basketball scholarship to Fort Valley State University, where she finished with degrees in mathematics and physics. After graduation, Harmon worked on the Apollo and Friendship capsules as a space analyst for McDonnell-Douglas before later founding her own information technology firm, Harmon Management Consultants, where she has served as a consultant for many major corporations, including Hewlett Packard, IBM, and Coca-Cola. Harmon also coached for 12 years (24 soccer seasons) with the Atlanta Youth Soccer Association while her son Joshua was growing up. Harmon remains an active member of the Hubbard Alumni Association, serving as the group's historian.
